MEMORANDUM

PRATTER, J.

AUGUST 21, 2017

Pascal and Lucy Da Cruz appeal the decision of the Imprelis Arborist Panel,¹ claiming that a number of trees rated for tree care should be rated for removal. Because the Appeals Panel decision in the Da Cruzes' case was neither arbitrary nor capricious, the Court will affirm their decision and deny the Da Cruzes' appeal.

BACKGROUND

Because the Court has written about the history of this litigation in several opinions, the following summary will be brief.

In the fall of 2010, DuPont introduced Imprelis, a new herbicide designed to selectively kill unwanted weeds without harming non-target vegetation. After widespread reports of damage to non-target vegetation, the Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA") began investigating Imprelis, leading to lawsuits, a suspension of Imprelis sales, and an EPA order preventing DuPont from selling Imprelis. In September 2011, DuPont started its own Claim Resolution Process to compensate victims of Imprelis damage. Despite this voluntary process, various plaintiffs continued to pursue their lawsuits, alleging consumer fraud/protection act violations, breach of express and/or implied warranty, negligence, strict products liability, nuisance, and trespass claims based on the laws of numerous states. After months of settlement discussions, including mediation, the parties came to a settlement agreement. The details of the settlement relevant to the appeals process will be discussed in greater detail below.

A. The Settlement

The Imprelis Class Action Settlement (“Settlement”) covers three classes of Imprelis Plaintiffs. Among the three settlement classes is a property owner class. That class includes all persons or entities who own or owned property in the United States to which Imprelis was applied from August 31, 2010 through August 21, 2011, as well as all persons who own or owned property adjacent to property to which Imprelis was applied and whose trees showed damage from Imprelis on or before the date of entry of the Preliminary Approval Order, or February 11, 2013. Under the Settlement, property owner class members who filed claims by the claims deadline would receive tree removal (or compensation for tree removal), payments for replacement trees, tree care and maintenance payments, and a 15% payment for incidental damages. The Settlement included a warranty that provided for all benefits but the 15% incidental damages award for Imprelis damage that manifested after the claims period closed but before May 31, 2015.

Section III.C.1.a.xi. sets forth the appeals process for property owner class members who file settlement claims. See Docket No.117-2, § III.C.1.a.xi. That provision sets the framework for the “Imprelis Alternative Dispute Resolution Panel,” comprised of three arborists – one chosen by DuPont, one chosen by Interim Co-Lead Counsel and Liaison Counsel, and one chosen by the other two arborists. The Agreement describes the Panel’s role as “review[ing] and determin[ing] appeals from the Settlement Claim Process, and decisions by DuPont relating to objections submitted in the course of the Imprelis Claim Resolution Process.” The Agreement limits the authority of the Panel to “resolving questions or challenges relating to determinations of: (a) tree ratings; (b) the height, and if applicable, the circumference of trees at issue for valuation and tree care respectively; (c) the number of trees qualifying for compensation from DuPont under the Settlement Claim Process; (d) whether a Class Member has provided adequate Spray Records; (e) warranty coverage; and (f) application of those requirements set forth in Exhibit 19 [outlining the types of symptoms found in Imprelis-injured trees and the types of evidence required for claim consideration].” Id. The Agreement also specifies that the Panel members will be subject to the Code of Ethics for Arbitrators in Commercial Disputes and that the evidence they consider must be that presented by the parties. In the context of discussing Panel review, the Agreement states that “Any Party maintains its rights to seek review from the Court.” Id. The Agreement does not set forth the standard of review to be applied by the Court in reviewing Panel determinations. The form filed by claimants appealing Panel decisions limits Court review to the record submitted to the Panel.

On February 12, 2013, this Court preliminarily approved the Settlement, and on September 27, 2013, the Court held a Final Fairness Hearing to determine whether the Settlement provided fair, reasonable, and adequate compensation to class members. On October 17, 2013, the Court granted the Class Plaintiffs’ Motion for Final Approval of the Settlement. The Order entering final judgment as to the Settlement states that class members are “permanently enjoined and barred from instituting, commencing, or prosecuting any action or other proceeding asserting any Released Claims, against any Releasee . . . by whatever means, in any local, state, or federal court, or in any agency or other arbitral or other forum” February

5, 2014 Order, Docket No. 274, ¶ 7. The Court also retained exclusive jurisdiction over any action relating to the Settlement:

Without affecting the finality of this Order, the Court shall retain jurisdiction over the implementation, enforcement, and performance of the Settlement Agreement, and shall have exclusive jurisdiction over any suit, action, motion, proceeding, or dispute arising out of or relating to the Settlement Agreement or the applicability of the Settlement Agreement that cannot be resolved by negotiation and agreement by Plaintiffs and DuPont.

B. Pascal and Lucy Da Cruz's Appeal

DuPont first inspected the Da Cruzes' property in 2012, at which time a Davey Tree arborist inspected 15 trees. About six months later, another arborist conducted a site visit and inspected 30 trees. DuPont then offered the Da Cruzes a Claims Resolution Agreement designating 18 trees for removal and 12 for tree care. The Da Cruzes objected to the Claims Resolution Agreement, claiming that the 12 trees listed for tree care should be removed. They also emphasized the large landscaping expense that removal would entail and reported that their dog has been ill since the application of Imprelis. DuPont sent another arborist to inspect the property after receiving the objection, and 32 trees were inspected. Based on this visit, DuPont changed its offer, reducing the number of trees for removal to 9, recommending tree care for 11 trees, and recommending 12 trees for no action because they did not show symptoms of Imprelis damage at that site visit. The Da Cruzes appealed their claim to the Arborist Panel. The Panel denied the appeal.

LEGAL STANDARD

DuPont urged the Court to adopt the standard of review used for arbitration, meaning that the Arborist Panel's fact finding should only be displaced when "there was evident partiality or corruption in the arbitrators," where the arbitrators "refus[ed] to hear evidence pertinent and material to the controversy,” or “where the arbitrators exceeded their powers.” See 9 U.S.C. § 10. Courts have described this standard as making arbitration decisions “substantially unreviewable.” See Del. Dept. of Health & Social Servs., Div. for Visually Impaired v. U.S. Dept. of Educ., 772 F.2d 1123, 1128 (3d Cir. 1985). Many of the appellants, by contrast, either implicitly or explicitly expect de novo review.

The Settlement Agreement is silent on this issue. The Court will chart a middle course. On the one hand, DuPont is correct that deference is due to the Arborist Panel’s expertise, particularly because the panel was assembled in a fashion intended to be neutral, with each party choosing one arborist and those two arborists selecting a third, and because the Arborist Panel clearly was intended to provide an alternative dispute resolution mechanism to streamline the appeals process, save all parties time and money, and reach resolutions as swiftly as possible. On the other hand, the parties carefully crafted the Settlement Agreement and yet still failed to include any explicit guidance to class members or to the Court regarding a standard of review, thereby giving class members no direct notice of what they would encounter at this level of review. This is an especially frustrating failure given the unique nature of this settlement. Indeed, a search of other multidistrict litigation and class action practice has yielded little helpful guidance or authority.

Taking this middle course, the Court will apply an “arbitrary and capricious” standard of review. See Del. Dept. of Health & Human Servs., 772 F.2d at 1128 (distinguishing standard of review under the Federal Arbitration Act from “arbitrary and capricious” standard); Wise v. Wachovia Sec., LLC, 450 F.3d 265, 268 (7th Cir. 2006) (contrasting “arbitrary and capricious” standard with standard applied in review of arbitration award). That is, factual findings and conclusions drawn by the Arborist Panel will be set aside only if they are “without reason, unsupported by substantial evidence or erroneous as a matter of law.” See Miller v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 632 F.3d 837, 845 (3d Cir. 2011) (internal quotations omitted). Such a standard gives effect to the parties’ clear intent that the Arborist Panel’s role be more than merely advisory and recognizes their expertise and neutrality, while still giving class members an opportunity for a more meaningful review of the Panel’s decisions.

DISCUSSION

The Da Cruzes’ main argument on appeal is that several of their trees should be rated for removal and replacement, rather than for tree care or no action.² They point to the disagreement between the arborists inspecting their property to show that many of the trees are more damaged than the third arborist reported. They also take issue with the Appeals Panel’s characterization of the photographs submitted with their claim as “poor quality.”

After reviewing the record before the Appeals Panel, the Court does not conclude that their decision to deny the Da Cruzes’ appeal was arbitrary or capricious. While it is true that DuPont’s own arborists disagreed about tree ratings for various trees, it is also true that those arborists inspected the property at different times over the course of years. Thus, it is entirely possible that any discrepancies in their ratings were due to the recovery of trees over time. Moreover, as to the “poor quality” pictures, the pictures may appear clear to a layperson, but still may not provide an expert with enough information to make the determinations necessary to change tree ratings in favor of the Da Cruzes. Therefore, the Court will not overturn the Arborist Panel’s decision in this matter.

² To the extent they complain of landscaping issues and a sick pet, they clarify in their reply that they are not seeking any compensation for these issues, but rather are raising them to provide a full picture of their claim. As to the landscaping, in particular, the Da Cruzes explain that because of the nature of their property and retaining wall, removing the trees piecemeal would be especially costly and inconvenient – removing all the trees at once would be their preferred course of action.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court will affirm the Arborist Panel decision and deny Pascal and Lucy Da Cruz's appeal. An appropriate order follows.
